

ANORDAIN NEW MODEL 1

The 'old' Model 1, anOrdain's very first watch, was launched only two years ago, and it was universally well-received. The decision to update the design, then, was not without risk, but every tweak seems to have been superbly judged. The workhorse Sellita SW200 automatic movement remains, but the 38mm case now sports neat crown guards, the markings have been honed and reorganised, and the new, heat-blued hands look beautiful against the labour-intensive Grand Feu enamel dial that is anOrdain's calling card.

AUTODROMO INTEREUROPA

The hand-wound Intereuropa, which was introduced last year, takes its name from the Coppa Intereuropa, the sports car race held at Monza. The latest variant, however, is more obviously influenced by another race meeting: the Bahamas Speed Week. Held every year between 1954 and 1966, the Speed Week began as a gathering of gentleman drivers but soon attracted factory teams and the likes of Stirling Moss and Phil Hill, who duelled against a backdrop of sea and sky echoed by the 'Nassau Blue' dial of this watch.

BAMFORD LONDON GMT HERITAGE

Bamford has never been bound by convention. The company made its name by customising watches from the likes of TAG Heuer and Zenith and, since launching a collection of its own in 2017, it has produced some outlandishly colourful designs. The new GMT Heritage automatic, though, follows respectfully in the footsteps of many great watches before it (most notably the Rolex GMT-Master) by pairing a simple black dial with a 'Pepsi' bezel, blue on top and red on the bottom.

BELCHENGRUPPE 1247 120°

New outfit Belchengruppe is named after five peaks scattered across France, Germany and Switzerland that were used as a primitive solar calendar by the Celts.

You'll be relieved to know that the company's first watch measures time rather more accurately than the Belchen System, thanks to a Sellita SW290-1 automatic movement, but the main attractions here are the beautifully designed 40mm case and a simple yet eye-catching dial featuring a font called Belchen Grotesk, which was created especially for the watch.
